

Ensuring the Primacy of the Right to Health, Prevention, and Conflict-of-Interest Safeguards at the 4th United Nations High-Level Meeting on the Prevention and Control of Non-Communicable Diseases
United Nations Headquarters, New York
September 2025

We, the undersigned organizations accredited by the UN Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC), other non-profit organizations, and experts call on world leaders to redouble efforts to achieve previous commitments to preventing noncommunicable diseases.

Globally, non-communicable chronic diseases—cancer, cardiovascular disease, diabetes, and chronic respiratory diseases—cause three-quarters of deaths worldwide. According to the WHO, 80% of cardiovascular disease and diabetes is preventable and the World Cancer Research Fund estimates that 40% of cancers are preventable. Universal access to high-quality health care—the unfulfilled objective of a 2019 UN High-Level Political Declaration on Universal Health Coverage—will be more easily achieved if noncommunicable diseases are effectively prevented before requiring expensive treatment.

Progress takes time, but too much human potential is sacrificed when governments indulge delays lasting decades and even generations.

Full and equitable realization of all human rights can be measured by optimizing healthy life expectancy, which now ranges from national averages of 44 years to 74 years and typically varies within member states, reflecting internal socioeconomic inequality. Deprivation, poor health and premature death obstruct the enjoyment of material and dignitary human rights and stoke tensions leading to armed conflict. Conflict, climate change, and COVID-19 have impeded progress in improving health, but episodic setbacks pale by comparison to stark, inequitably felt, persistent and largely preventable ill-health.

Consider the following in future national actions to reduce rates of non-communicable disease:

1. Ensure the primacy of the actionable right to health, food, water, shelter, other fundamental human rights, and the collective right to development. Of approximately 60 million deaths annually, half are attributable to entirely preventable causes, largely due to poorly regulated commercial products and services and inadequate critical water infrastructure. Prevention is more affordable and humane, but is less immediately politically gratifying and prone to resistance from commercially vested interests. WHO, Harvard School of Public Health, Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation, and Lancet commission experts estimate:

- malnutrition in all its forms causes 11 million deaths per year and nearly half of deaths of children under age 5,
- tobacco causes 8 million deaths/year,
- air pollution from burning fossil fuels causes 8 million deaths/year,
- inadequate water supply, sanitation, and hygiene causes 3.5 million deaths/year,
- alcohol causes 2.6 million deaths/year,
- toxic chemicals and pesticides cause 2 million deaths/year,
- suboptimal breastfeeding driven by promotion of breastmilk substitutes causes 823,000 deaths/year.

Seven years have passed since the UN Human Rights Council mandated a working group to elevate the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development to treaty status. Eleven years have passed since the Council mandated another working group to negotiate a treaty to help ensure that transnational and other businesses respect human rights and at least two more years of negotiations are anticipated. Justiciable, meaningfully enforced rights are foundations of the rule of law. Prioritizing human rights and restoring solidarity in acute and persistent crises commands swift responses. “Progressive” realization of rights cannot come to mean “weak” or “never.”

A rights-based approach requires that legal and regulatory measures needed to achieve NCD-prevention goals should be included in September’s Political Declaration and a reckoning for failures to make meaningful progress to date.

2. Adopt a Code-of-Conduct for engaging with civil society as urged by 421 mainly ECOSOC-accredited NGOs calling for conflict-of-interest safeguards, ensuring access to information, a UN lobbying registry, and access to so many UN negotiations secreted from public view. NGOs need more tools to ensure that UN and government institutions are accountable for promises they make in New York, Geneva, and national capitals to address noncommunicable diseases. See: <http://tinyurl.com/UNConduct> These important elements of access to justice are already implemented by many governments, nationally, but many is not enough and UN institutions should be models for national safeguards in governance.

3. Specifically mandate relatable consumer warning labels about the NCD impact of commercially traded products and services, especially food, alcohol, tobacco, fossil fuels and machines they power, the true costs of which equate to half of the global commercial economy. Of the US\$101 trillion global economy, people spend:

- \$10 trillion on food, including breastmilk substitutes,
- \$1 trillion on tobacco,
- \$1 trillion on fossil fuels,
- \$1.5 trillion on gas/diesel passenger cars, and
- more on furnaces, cooking equipment, and other machines that are powered by fossil fuels.

The noncommunicable diseases that many of these products cause more than doubles their market cost to equivalent to half of the global commercial economy, with most of the burden borne by the public sector, including harm to human health, reduced productivity of all industries, greenhouse gas emissions, pollution, and the largely uncalculated ravages child labour and unlivable wages. For instance:

- The UN Food and Agriculture Organization estimated that global food systems imposed \$12.7 trillion \(in 2020 Purchasing Power Parity dollars\) in externalized costs, due mainly to poor diet and greenhouse gas emissions from ruminant animals, especially cattle.
- The International Monetary Fund estimates that the \$7 trillion in “explicit” and “implicit subsidies” for fossil fuels \(e.g., responding to pollution and greenhouse gas emissions\) is seven-fold higher than market prices.
- The WHO estimates the economic costs of tobacco to be US\$1.4 trillion.
- Experts estimate the costs of alcohol to the drinker and society at approximately US\$2.6 trillion.

Consumer product and service labelling should reflect companies’ general legal duty to warn and could help shift purchases toward sustainable options. Measuring and reporting such information in meaningful ways at the point-of-sale should help populations better steer markets toward preventing noncommunicable diseases. Likewise, national economic performance should be measured using true cost accounting. The financial costs of preventable diseases bleed the fiscal capacity of governments to nation-build and improve prospects of their peoples.

We cannot indulge years of private sector resistance, casting doubt on research, quibbling over warning language, or offering to tell the good news, but not the bad news. Much is already known by independent experts about the adverse impact of these products, but it is generally not communicated to consumers and is disputed by louder, misleading messages perpetuated by seller-designed halos. Production and consumption patterns must change to improve productivity, well-being, and effectiveness of national governments.

4. Restore the solidarity of UN member states to raise Official Development Assistance to 0.7% of Gross National Income, a 1969 recommendation of former Canadian Prime Minister Lester Pearson’s United Nations Commission and current target #17.2 of the Sustainable Development Goals.

The 1969 Commission’s goal would have been almost within reach for OECD countries if it had been pursued a decade earlier when Official Development Assistance was nearly 0.6% of Gross National Income in OECD countries. Instead, it fell by nearly half and remains so low 55 years later, even lower than the notoriously austere

Reagan/Thatcher administrations in the United States and United Kingdom and even during the COVID-19 pandemic.

During the COVID-19 pandemic, many high-income countries nearly doubled their national budgets to protect their own citizens, but Official Development Assistance rose only from 0.30% of total OECD GNI in 2019 to 0.37% in 2023, an average rise of US$0.02/capita/day for people living outside high-income countries:

Without meaningful increases in Official Development Assistance and significant debt forgiveness—itsself, a legacy of insufficient ODA—realizing high-quality care for non-communicable diseases and development opportunities for member states will be impaired. The US government’s recent retreat from the World Health Organization, multilateral trade-tariff wars, and pressure to increase defence spending by diplomatic pressure and fomenting security and human rights chaos, create a vacuum for development assistance spending that must be filled. Global peace, security, solidarity, and optimized healthy life expectancy cannot be achieved by bullets and bombshells alone.

5. Financially support civil society NCD advocacy for on-going and formal annual evaluation and accountability for progress, appointed at arm’s length with security of tenure until 2030. Governments and UN institutions should promote more frequent, independently funded fact-checkers from tenured academics and civil society organizations to report to Parliaments on national and global NCD progress. Reports should be ongoing and formalized at least annually. The first High-Level Political commitment in 2011—14 years ago—has yet to spur the kind of momentum that people need to realize benefits during their lifetimes. Independent advocacy organizations are often starved for funds and lose their impartiality if they turn to discretionary grants from the private sector, such as pharmaceutical companies or governments that they are duty-bound to hold to account.

Governments should commit to provide funding to support the work of a number of independent experts in proportion to their population (e.g., one expert per million population), appointed as officers of Parliament, appointed by courts, or funded by other arm’s length, transparent means to enjoy security of tenure at least until 2030. Advocates should be selected for demonstrated expertise in noncommunicable diseases and the industry sectors that make so many causal contributions to NCD risks, including the tobacco, food, alcohol, and fossil fuel industries and machines that fossil fuels power.
